Among the few small acroage tracts still intact in Musa Isle is one of some seven acros intersected by the winding road through the settlement, belonging to Dr. J. B. Seeds whose home and office is now located on West Flagler street. A portion of the tract south of the main road is still covered with those stately live eaks tract south of the main road is still covered with those stately live caks of the old hammock. The balance of the place on the north and between the road and the Miami river was cleared some years ago and a portion of it set to citrus fruit, while the rest of it was left for gardening and floraculture. Dr. Seeds has a hobby for orchids and some three years ago he established on this latter cleared portion Orchid Deli Gardens, where he placed a skilled gardener in charge for the propagation of the various vaplaced a skilled gardener in charge for the propagation of the various va-victies of the delicate and beautiful orchid as well as various other flowers. Gold fish was hnother feature claim-ing Dr. Seeds' attention and he built a pretty pond on each of the two tracts.

THE progress of the enterprise was somewhat slower than anticipated and the high water of last season destroyed much of the preparation previously made and ruined much of the plant house stock. As a result of this mishap Dr. Seeds decided to abandon the enterprise, for a time at least, and last August leased the property to Malcolm McAllister, for the past three and a half years with the Exotic Gardens and for two and a half years head flordecorator. Since taking over the Seeds property in Musa Isle he has cleaned up the Orchid Dell Gardens tract and quite transformed the place in the few intervening months since he started.

With the aid of his brother-in-law.
John Crichton, another skilled Scotch intriculurist, he has also greatly augmented the nursery department stock by the setting of hundreds of crotons,

The little fellow was gradually failing and a change of climate scemed to be the only hope. In the sunshine and fresh air of Miami the youngster began to gain from the start and is now as healthy and strong a boy as there is in the city. In speaking of the change in the boy's health, Mr. Mc. Allister remarked: "My wife and I would feel amply repaid for moving to Miami if we had gained not a penny in temporal wealth. But we have prospered satisfactorily since coming here and both wife and I are heartlly glad we came to south Florida. We consider the salubrious climate, the perennial sunshine, ocean zephyrs, the gan to gain from the start and is now perennial sunshine, ocean zephyrs, the beauties of Miami and vicinity, well worth any effort that might be involved if we merely held our own here. One of the main points in this story is Mr. McAllister's demonstration of what may be accomplished here by those who have knowledge in any parthose who have knowledge in any par-ticular line of growing things and are willing to work. During the quiet summer season he has been able to realize enough to meet his expenses while rehabilitating and building, which in itself is remarkable. With the fine soil at his command, his genaral horticultural knowledge and the increasing demand for flowers, trees and shrubs, he appears to be on the road to a large as well as prosperous nursery and floral business.

TOLD IN THE LOBBY

"O^{NE} time," said the traveling man in the lobby at the Hotel Ta-Miami, "I was on a train that ground slowly to a stop in front of a dilapidated little cabin in Arkansas, to permit the train ahead to get out of the block. A dilapidated man sat on a bench near the cabin door. A blackand-tan hound sat on the sandy ground and-tan hound sat on the sandy ground and howled dismally. Some of the passengers got out to find the cause of the dog's distress. As he was in no apparent pain, they approached the seedy individual, and one of them asked: 'What alls that dog?'

"'Ilookworm,' responded the man.

"'Why should he how!?'

"Ifookworm; he's lazy.'

"I wasn't aware that hookworm was painful.'

Tain't,' responded the garrulous native.

"'Then why should he how!?'
"The melancholy individual stretched his legs, shifted his quid and replied:
"Wal, it's like this, stranger: Thet dawg hoz hookworms, and he's lazy, and he's been settln' on a sand bur fer three days, an' he's too lazy to get off, so he jest sets thar and howls 'cause it hurts'."

cause it hurts."

"I also was on a train that pulled into a certain town in Florida," said the man in the lobby at the Hotel Security, "and as all the windows in the coach were open, we noticed an innocent-appearing man dashed around the corner of the station, carrying a basket on his arm. Hurrying to the window of the smoking compartment, he exhibited a black quart bottle which he had taken from the basket, and with a knowing wink said:

"'Any gent like to buy a bottle of nice ice-cold tea?"

"He sold every bottle, but concluded each sale with: 'Better wait till the train has pulled out before you drink, you know, because I don't want any trouble.'

"The train pulled out and I remained on the station platform, and I asked the man why he had requested the purchasers to wait until the train started before taking a drink.

"Because,' he said, with a siy wink, 'them bottles all contained ice-cold tea'."

BUSINESS ETHICS OBSERVED

ADVERTISING given to The Herald is not revealed in any other way than through publication in these columns. Strict observance of secrecy is observed in the matter of all advertisements, both commercial and classified, until publication has been made as ordered. No information is given out regarding classified advertisements until they have been printed. This is done in justice to advertisers who may have well founded reasons for keeping their business secret from competitors. And it is only business ethics to do so.

THE HERALD'S circulation is so extensive and so valuable in pulling power that no other method is necessary in obtaining results. Advertisements may be left with The Herald with the absolute understanding that nothing is to be revealed as to their contents until printed. Herald circulation will do the rest.
